Seasons change. So can eye health.

Who doesn’t love the colors of fall? The brilliant red and yellow leaves mark a change in seasons and serve as a reminder that, as you age, your vision can change, too.

If you wear glasses or contacts or have had corrective surgery and still have difficulty recognizing faces, reading signs, watching TV, or even seeing the leaves on the trees, you may have low vision.

Vision rehabilitation can help. See your eye care professional to learn more. Keep autumn’s beauty in your field of vision.
